

To Mars

People have been interested in manned trips to Mars for some time. To make the trip comfortable, a ship would be accelerated at g for half the trip, and then decelerated at g for the remaining half. If the distance to be traveled is the shortest distance between Earth and Mars, approximately 54.5×10^9 m, how long would the trip take as viewed from Earth? Do relativistic effects need to be taken into account?