To the Stevens Community,

One of the five priorities identified in our strategic planning process, “Through Collaboration, Impact” was on display in full force at this week’s Innovation Expo. From the creativity and technical rigor displayed in the senior projects, to the research innovations showcased in the Ph.D. student posters, to the stimulating speakers, to the pitch competitions, the entire Stevens community showed its finest colors to our friends and colleagues and to the many alumni, corporate friends, and external visitors who attended the day’s activities.

The day was a resounding success, and I want to acknowledge and express my gratitude for the many, many members of the campus community whose hard work paid off to bring this ambitious program to fruition.

I want to particularly thank the leadership and the entire team of the Office of Research, Innovation and Entrepreneurship, which conceptualized, planned, and organized the day’s activities. Their vision and skilled execution of a multi-dimensional program was superb. In addition, many members of the campus community provided support of many kinds to ensure that Innovation Expo reflected Stevens at its best—from the faculty who guided the creation of the students’ projects and research posters to University Events, Communications and Marketing, Facilities, Dining Services, and many more.

Congratulations to all who contributed to an enormously successful day. Job well done!

Per aspera ad astra,

Nariman Farvardin
